storytelling a tradition that built human civilization may soon destroy it humans are storytelling animals stories are what make our societies possible countless books celebrate their virtues but jonathan gottschall an expert on the science of stories argues that there is a dark side to storytelling we can no longer ignore storytelling the very tradition that built human civilization may be the thing that destroys it in the story paradox gottschall explores how a broad consortium of psychologists communications specialists neuroscientists and literary quants are using the scientific method to study how stories affect our brains the results challenge the idea that storytelling is an obvious force for good in human life yes storytelling can bind groups together but it is also the main force dragging people apart and it's the best method we've ever devised for manipulating each other by circumventing rational thought behind all civilization's greatest ills: environmental destruction, runaway demagogues, warfare. You will always find the same master factor: a mind-disordering story. Gottschall argues that societies succeed or fail depending on how they manage these tensions, and it has only become harder as new technologies that amplify the effects of disinformation campaigns, conspiracy theories, and fake news make separating fact from fiction nearly impossible. With clarity and conviction, Gottschall reveals why our biggest asset has become our greatest threat, and what, if anything, can be done. It is a call to stop asking how we can change the world through stories and start asking how we can save the world from stories.

excerpt since the childhood of the races certain old world stories have appeared in different form in the folklore of different nations all bearing the stamp of the same source the interest of primitive people in attributing human impulses and human lines of conduct to the animal world perhaps the earliest of all is the kid who would not go which corresponds to the old new england nursery tale of the old woman and her pig and which in its original form dates back to hebrew translations how they brought hairlock home is a typical cumulative tale of norway the story of ibbity is one of the few obtainable madagascar folk tales and symbolizes the search of a primitive people for the source of natural phenomena our own southern negroes have given us the stories of mr elephant and mr frog why the bear sleeps all winter little bear and brother wolf and the rock the american indians have given us a varied collection of animal myths including how the rabbit tried to coast how the squirrel got wings the talking grass and many other camp fire tales that have a nature background the reason for using these animal stories for story telling and supplementary reading lies in the instinctive interest which all children have in those stories that express the interpretation of life made by primitive races this interest and the indirect moral teaching of many of the stories included in this volume give them a point of departure over and above that held by the modern story
